Applique Table Lamp

With a medallion made of molded concrete, the Applique Table Lamp was designed by Tom Caldwell after an artifact he had seen. The patina achieved from the choice of cement convinces the eye that the wheel-like shape could be old, but he so adeptly paired it with light, contemporary elements, the gray table lamp has paradoxical contemporary attributes. These contrasting aspects include the optic crystal base and finial, the white linen shade, and the thin supports that connect all of these elements in an antique brass finish.
